

Developing International and Intercultural Leadership

Course Description:

In this short graduate-level course students for PhD students, we will explore how to effectively communicate, develop international projects, implement intercultural communication, and lead international groups. The presentations and interactive activities will lead to learning outcomes that will equip students to function in a global environment in their future (academic) careers. This includes searching for international grant and project funding. Instructors will be American and Czech, and will bring different backgrounds, perspectives, solutions, and tools to working in such teams.

Learning Objectives:

Students will:

- Enhance their intercultural skills in their academic work and be able to function in an international environment
- Improve skills and competences to work in international teams, focusing in particular on overcoming challenges to virtual collaboration
- Create personal international professional vision which incorporated intercultural team work perspectives and personal leadership growth
- Learn how to search for, analyze, and prepare international grants and funding opportunities which can support international and intercultural academic, research, and project work

Course length: 4 sessions with lunch break, in blended virtual and in-person seminar/workshop format

Venue: hybrid (Law Faculty, room TBA)

Instructors: Eva Janebova, Ph.D., Christopher Medalis, Ph.D.

This course is co-funded by the Erasmus plus Grant Mitigating Covid together: Enhancing Capacities of Academics and Students in Virtual Learning and Teaching Spaces, num. 20201-CZ01-KA226-HE-094288.

